Correction for Burd et al., “The Brief Case: Loa loa in a Patient from Nigeria”

© Eileen M. Burd,a,b © Ahmed Babiker,a,b Jessica K. Fairley,b Divya Bhamidipati,b Laila E. Woc-Colburn,b © Blaine A. Mathisonc

aDepartment of Pathology and Laboratory Medicine, Emory University School of Medicine, Atlanta, Georgia, USA
bDepartment of Medicine, Division of Infectious Diseases, Emory University School of Medicine, Atlanta, Georgia, USA
cInstitute for Clinical and Experimental Pathology, ARUP Laboratories, Salt Lake City, Utah, USA

Page 4, lines 9–11: The sentence reading “In patients with high microfilarial load, ivermectin can be used as initial treatment to reduce the microfilarial burden prior to treatment with diethylcarbamazine (6, 7)” should read “Reducing high microfilarial loads is complicated, and several approaches have been recommended, including a course of albendazole and/or apheresis per the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (https://www.cdc.gov/parasites/loiasis/health_professionals/index.html, accessed 8 June 2021).”